So it happens that upon every such change of administration the new broom, which is of Columbia. Suppose we try the experiment alleged to sweep clean, is pushed into every corner of Uncle Sam's official mansion. The previous methods of housekeeping are rigidly investigated, the old servants are overhauled, eross-examined, bully ragged, a premium is put not only upon truthful evidence of abuses, but upon spiteful and slanderous tale bearing. The new housekeeper holds up her hands in holy horror at the discovery of petty irregularities, which existed nevertheless when she had charge herself before, and which will be in existence when she vacates the premises, with the result of throwing her successor into similar spasms of surprise and indignation.

This investigating, disparaging tendency the part of the newcomer, when applied to methods of domestic administration, works in a general way for the public welfare. Many individuals suffer cruel injustice, many timeserving sneaks and slanderers reap unjust rewards for spiteful lying, but there is undoubtedly during and for a period subsequent to this season of suspicious scrutiny more work and better work performed by the

Not only does the new government disparage and reverse its predecessor's administrative methods, but it is too apt, when once in the way of undoing whatever has been done, to discredit and overthrow the previous national policies, whether at issue between the parties in the election or not, and wnether domestic or foreign in their nature.

This excess of jealons destructiveness, especially when foreign affairs are in question, is capable of working great national injury. If the republic's policy in handling some question between it and another nation has been made an issue in the campaign preceding the election the course of the successful party is marked out for it in advance. But in all other cases it is highly desirable that the republic's foreign policy shall exhibit a national influence and standing.

New York and Brooklyn have, in an unnaturally quiet way, been celebrating the tenth anniversary of the opening of the Brooklyn bridge. There was no parade nor was there any music, but the great structure was decorated in places with bunting and all intelligent people who sawit knew why. It seems strange that Washington should wait for New York to point out the way, but local pride must not interpose to spoil the effect of a good example. Eighty-four years ago that triumph of engineering art-Long bridge-was thrown open to the public, and yet in all these four-score and four years no one has suggested that the anniversary of its completion be publicly and jubilantly remembered. In view of this lengthy period of silence and neglect, and also bearing in mind the probability that the city which has been again and again flooded because of the bridge's efficiency as a dam might be somewhat lukewarm as to subscriptions and enthusiasm, THE STAR would respectfully suggest to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and its side partner-Jackson Citythat they, as the only beneficiaries, arrange and pay for such a jubilative, commemorative occasion as is now long time overdue.

Folks who are inclined to growl because the Virginia strawberry crop is short can console themselves with the compensatory fact that the supply of potatoes and cabbage will be pheeffects of cleanliness THE STAR once more calls attention to a weakness which may undermine the hygienic walls we have been at so much pains to erect and from behind which we hope to defy cholera and other epidemics that are fostered by dirt. In order to point its suggestions THE STAR has closely investigated a sample square that is no worse than any one of several similar subdivisions of the city, which suffer the same lack of certain sanitary facilities that is to be noted. The section inspected is bounded by Third and Four and a half and M and N streets southwest and within its limits about seven hundred and fifty human beings have what they call their home. Of these tenants nearly one-half are white, a fact that only makes more horrible the fact that there is but one water hydrant and one sewer connection in all the square, and those exceptions belong not to a dwelling-house but to a recently erected stable. The stagnation, the filth, the stench may not be described. During the year ending June 30, 1891, there were twenty-seven deaths in that square-eleven of the deceased being white and sixteen negroes-but that excessive mortality can easily be understood and accounted for by anyone who will look at the place with eyes of reason and give his nostrils a fair chance at the odors which naturally prevail. And yet, bad as things are in square 545, contain the names of such horrible foreigners mother country. This is a species of deportawere when THE STAR described it a year ago. as Beethoven, Mozart and Hayden.-Chicago tion not contemplated by the Geary act and The District health authorities have been looking into it and the Sanitary League has invaded tte foul-smelling precincts. most businesslike shape, would consist of a sufficiently commodious structure in which clothes might be washed and froned and bodies refreshed. Such projects have gone far beyond the experimental stage in other lands and wherever they have been established the rewherever they have been established the results were extremely gratifying to all parties.

Little homes that had always been redolent of overworked ands were purified while thousands of men and women who had lived for years on terms of listlessness, if not of enmity, with soap and warm water, enjoyed the newcomer to tear down what its predecessor has proposed is perhaps natural. The stronger the showing of blunders of worse committed by the late administration and corrected by the new administration, and corrected by the new administration and corrected by the new administration and corrected by the new administration, the more forcible and impressive will be the latter's campaign book, and the better its chances of sults were extremely gratifying to all parties. Little homes that had always been redosult in a certain moral elevation. What has been done elsewhere is possible in the District on Square 545.

This investigation emphasizes the conviction that the extension of the water and sewerage systems of the city to squares and sections now unsupplied is a matter not merely of sectional but of general public necessity. The sanitary fortifications of the city are no stronger than their weakest spot. The investigation shows also that eagerness to learn in respect to sanitary matters and the desire to improve unsauitary conditions are not confined to any limited portion of the city or to any particular class of citizens. The educational campaign, conducted by the Sanitary League and fostered by THE STAR's publications, is working beneficent results in every part of Washington. The people generally are making of themselves vigilant inspectors of their own premises and surroundings, and intelligent sanitary self-reformers.

Emerson's laconic truth-"Commit a crime Emerson's laconic truth—"Commit a crime and the earth is made of glass"—is aptly illustrated by the locating of John W.
